Reclaim 250 Hours

250

hours a year, handed back to your team by a little well placed AI

THE QUIET TAX

Where does the time go?

Five hours a week. That is what the average person quietly loses to work that software should already be doing. Copying, pasting, retyping, chasing, and answering the same question for the hundredth time. It is the least visible cost in your business, and the most expensive.

5 HOURS LOST / WEEK → 250+ HOURS LOST / YEAR → 1 PERSON, EVERY YEAR

FIVE PLAYS, ONE AFTERNOON TO SET UP

Put AI on the busywork

No data team. No six month project. Just five practical moves, set up once, running quietly in the background.

01 Clear the inbox — AI sorts, summarizes, and drafts replies in your voice. You open an inbox that is already triaged and waiting. — 75 min / week

02 Capture every meeting — An AI notetaker writes the recap and pulls out who owns what, and by when, before the room clears. — 45 min / week

03 Automate the follow up — AI drafts timely, personal follow ups and routes them for a fast human review. Nothing slips. — 40 min / week

04 End manual data entry — AI reads the documents, pulls the fields, updates your records, then builds the report on its own. — 50 min / week

05 Answer the repeats — A trained assistant handles routine questions instantly and passes the rest along with full context. — 40 min / week

DO THE MATH

Where the 250 comes from

Here is the weekly busywork those five plays remove for one person. The minutes are conservative.

That is 250 minutes a week of pure busywork

Clear the ripple effects too, fewer interruptions and far less rework, and most teams win back a clean five hours. Across the year, that is more than 250 hours per person.

SO WHAT IS 250 HOURS, REALLY

The fun part

31 full work days — Yes, more than a month of work, handed back.

6 work weeks — Six weeks off the calendar, every single year.

10k+ emails untouched — Messages your team never has to retype by hand.

∞ cookout planning — Time to actually fire up the grill on the Fourth.
